one at his first dance, and later on any occasion that he may wish to celebrate. Names are commemorated in poetry.¹

Twins are welcomed and spoken of as nuole juok, literally "children of God"; the first is called Angar, the second Tian. The next child born after twins is called Nabol. 845

Children are brought up in the house of their father. There is no segregation of the sexes, brother and sister grow up together and may play together, and a boy may beat his sisters if he considers them unruly. The chosen companions of boys appear to be their unwa (brothers and ortho-cousins) and of girls their nyiwa (sisters and ortho-cousins). Cousins, the children of two brothers or two sisters, may play together in the same way as brothers and sisters, but as a hamlet constitutes the habitation of a group with male descent the children of the brothers are likely to see most of each other when young. If married brothers and sisters happen to live near one another their children—who would be una, nyina, uwaja, and nywaja to each other—will have opportunities of meeting, and it seemed that there was no restriction on those of opposite sexes playing together. As women go to live in the gol of their husbands, the children of two sisters are unlikely to see much of each other, so that the uma nyima relationship is unlikely to be an intimate one. 593 605

There is a certain definite relationship between children and their mother's brother (na). It is the mother's brother who usually gives a boy his first spear; he also has a right to some of the cattle given as bride-wealth for his sister's daughter, and might perhaps influence her in her choice of a husband. A girl, considered particularly good-looking, married a Dinka, and it was said that her father and na persuaded her to reject her Shilluk suitors and accept the Dinka because he could give many more cattle than the Shilluk. Though the na always takes a portion of his sister's daughter's bride-wealth, inheritance being from the father to the son he leaves nothing to his sister's children; his own sons, however, inherit his lien on the bride-wealth of the nyaka, i.e. of their own nywaja (father's sister's daughter). If a man is well off he may give his sister's son some cattle when he wants to get married, but this is a gift, not an obligation. At a funeral the principal duties fall on the son, but at the final sacrifice the sister's son must sacrifice a sheep or a bull, according to his means. 604 [428] [431]

The waja (father's sister) always contributes two head of cattle [583]
